Red flags for investors

When you invest in a company, you're not just buying a share of the business. You're also buying a share of the company's future. And that future can be anything but bright. In fact, many companies that seem like good investments today are actually red flags for investors. Here are some of the most common red flags to watch for:

- High debt levels: A company with a high debt-to-equity ratio is more likely to have trouble meeting its obligations.
- Low profit margins: A company with low profit margins is less likely to be profitable in the long run.
- High turnover: A company with high employee turnover is less likely to have a stable workforce.
- High customer churn: A company with high customer churn is less likely to have a loyal customer base.
- High executive turnover: A company with high executive turnover is less likely to have a strong leadership team.
